obtained from Chappell Hill Museum), Letter: From Chappell Hill Museum, Austin, TexasNov 4, 1980Dear Carolyn,I am so sorry to be so late in answering your letter, but I've been living in Austin now for nine months having moved from San Antonio in late February. The Post Office there was slow in forwarding my mail.I wish I had known about the Jackson reunions--and the book Robert Griggs wrote.To answer your questions, I know for a fact that Harris and Reddick were buried in the Cress Cemetery about three miles out of Chappell Hill. I saw Harris' tombstone which was quite broken, but I never heard anyone say whether William and his wife were buried there, but I think it is more or less likely.I know also that Hettie Bird Jackson was buried in Durango (Falls Co., TX) because I saw her tombstone, a quite big one. You see my father's stepmother and her children lived there in Durango after my grandfather Terrell A. Jackson died. The Jacksons came to the U.S. when President Jackson's father came. My uncle Gib or Gilbert told me the later Jacksons wouldn't claim kin to Pres. Andrew Jackson because of his very profane language.I met your grandmother Rogers one day when I was with my Aunt Mary, Pat's mother who was my father's sister. They were own (?) sister and brother--their father was Terrell Andrew Jackson, or TA as he was called and T.J. was not their father.Jackson Line:(here a cursory genealogy sketch shows Lois' line:Lois<-John Day<-Terrell A<-William<-Joseph (Born? Died Columbia Tenn, no date, married Hettie Bird Pickenville, Ala.)A note says "probably fought in Amer. Revolution", but it is unclear which one she means (?Joseph). She makes a remark that "you and I go back to Joseph Sr."Joseph and Hettie Bird's sons:Joseph Jr.ReddicHarrisTerrell J.WilliamThe five sons came to Texas from Alabama in 1840.I have a book that shows that T.J's place of birth was Georgia. Occupation: farmer. Total property was $185,000, 47 slaves-(see GEDCOM Note for remainder)
